MASSACHUSETTS — Two million in grant awards will fund training that aims to assist 445 unemployed or underemployed people who need targeted support fill in-demand jobs in construction, finance and insurance, information technology, social assistance, and transportation, the Baker-Polito Administration announced today.

Nine public-private partnerships between local businesses, unions, education and training providers, and MassHire Workforce Boards and Career Centers will run two-year programs across Massachusetts with their awarded Senator Kenneth J. Donnelly Workforce Success Grants and matching contributions of at least 30 percent.

Each program aims to train and place unemployed or underemployed Massachusetts residents into in-demand regional occupations with a starting wage of at least $14.25 per hour.

“Recovering from the economic challenges created by the COVID-19 pandemic requires investments that keep our local businesses competitive and help workers whose livelihoods have been undermined by this global public health emergency,” said Gov. Charlie Baker. “These grants and the programs they fund are important for an equitable economic recovery across the Commonwealth.”

The Donnelly Workforce Success Grants are funded through the Workforce Competitiveness Trust Fund (WCTF), which invests in programs that serve people across Massachusetts whose life experiences and circumstances make it difficult for them to succeed in employment without targeted support.

That includes underemployed people who rely on aid from public benefits to support their families, individuals who have been disconnected from the workforce for a long period, and people who have not been able to complete formal schooling. Other participants may face barriers to work due in part to not speaking English as their first language, past involvement with the criminal justice system, or health problems such as a disability or substance use history. A very real circumstance for many people right now is having been suddenly laid off due to COVID-19.

“Half of lower-income Americans have reported household job or wage loss due to COVID-19, according to a Pew Research Center survey conducted in mid-April, and both the health and economic impacts of the pandemic have fell disproportionately on people of color,” said Lt. Gov. Karyn Polito. “Investing in our people will help those facing the greatest financial challenges find stability and security while strengthening our businesses and driving economic growth.”

The Workforce Competitiveness Trust Fund is administered by Commonwealth Corporation on behalf of the Executive Office of Labor and Workforce Development.

“After months of working to ensure that over one million people in Massachusetts get the unemployment and pandemic financial relief that they need to stabilize their families, the urgency now is re-employment, and we know that there will not be a one-to-one correlation between the jobs that people left and the jobs they return to because of the COVID-19 shock,” said Secretary of Labor and Workforce Development Rosalin Acosta. “Investing in programs like these is critical to helping workers and companies adapt to this ‘new normal.’”

“So many companies and workers have made impressive pivots to remote and digital work in just a few weeks, but workers of color are over-represented among those with digital skill gaps, in part due to longstanding racial and ethnic disparities in access to education and training, financial resources and career-path jobs,” said Commonwealth Corporation President and CEO Christine Abrams. “We need to continue making these investments so that Massachusetts’ recovery leaves no one behind.”
